To the Garnaut Review

I believe the evidence on Climate Change is becoming stronger and Australia will be significantly affected. I think Australia should set itself a strong target, eg. at least 30% reduction on 1990 greenhouse emission levels by 2020.

We should try to convince other countries to act but we should not hang back waiting for others to act. Our actions will speak louder than our words.

Better to start making the adjustments soon. Why shouldn't the MRET target of 20% start immediately?
