

Garnaut Climate Change Review Submission

Targets should be as stringent as possible.

Our civilisation is on the verge of collapse.

To cushion the blow, we need to sensibly allow the world population to decline to less than two billion, and do everything possible to use renewable energies and lessen our per capita environmental impacts.

Australia must not wait for others to move.

We have been treating the atmosphere as a rubbish tip for millennia. Probably too late to stop, but perhaps not if we act quickly.

It's no use talking about costs. The costs of not doing enough are infinite.

George Carrard

George Carrard
OATLEY 2223